

From: Schober, Larry
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/15/02 1:41pm
Subject: Microsoft Settlement

Forget Big Tobacco. Forget Microsoft. I'm going to make you a star:

I am shocked and appalled to learn of a potent delivery system that luridly and unfairly bundles a highly addictive substance in a seemingly innocuous way. This delivery system threatens and harms the national interests in our food distribution system. I am seeking an immediate stop order be issued to the industry. In addition, I would like to be granted whistle blower status in this case.

In particular I am referring to the bundling of sugar in prepared foods. As opposed to simply dusting foods with sugar, which can be casually detached (brushed off), food preparers needlessly bundle this highly addictive substance in their products. Furthermore, this delivery system (and it is a delivery system - the amount of sugar in the product can be controlled in the recipe) is used to create an artificial craving for a product within the unsuspecting purchaser.

I urge you and your colleagues to take up this vital matter post-haste, and send me my whistle blower check.

I anxiously remain awaiting your response,

Lawrence Schober